studies have identified this problem area, but changes to the Navy's culture have been slow. This thesis highlights sleep deprivation of sailors and its effects on their mood, behavior, and risk of suicide. It also compares the sleep duration of sailors on the USS Ashland (LSD-48) to other platforms in the Navy. This study is important because of the high cost of failure as shown by recent collisions and multiple suicides. We have conducted a longitudinal, cross-sectional study of sailors' sleep habits and have analyzed the data to determine sleep habits of sailors, used statistical methods to analyze the impact of sleep on mood and behavior, and conducted a review of scientific

This amount of sleep is comparable to other archival naval studies, with 32 (87%) of those 37 studies showing that sailors sleep less than the recommended amount. Lack of sleep was found to be related to worse total
