Understanding the interrelationship of business, society and government is vital to working at any level in a company of any size. This text uses a case analysis approach to explore this interrelationship in today ' s high-tech global community. The authors crystallize the complex array of issues that business leaders, managers, and employees face in market and nonmarket environments, from balancing stakeholder interests and dealing with government regulations to managing crises and making socially responsible and ethical decisions. Technical concepts come to life through a variety of cases and case questions, thought-provoking personal and professional applications, ethical dilemmas, and practical exercises. Furthermore, an appendix offers approaches to case analysis and includes a case analysis table that serves as a model for students and professors. With its thorough coverage of relevant issues and skill-building elements to stimulate critical thinking, this text will prepare students to understand and confront real-world business concerns.

Excerpt from The South African Mining Journal, Vol. 22: With Which Is Incorporated "the South African Mines, Commerce and Industries"; Part I; Jan. 18, 1913 It will be observed that Nissen stamps have become popular crushing machines on Rhodesian mines. A further feature of interest is that five of the seven mines dealt with above are installing roasting furnaces. An interesting statement was made by Sir John C. Willoughby, Bart, at the meeting of the Rhodesian s.a. Options Syndicate, Ltd., recently in Diamonds. London. He said: Shareholders would all probably remember that some time ago the British South Africa Company brought an action against De Beers Consolidated, with a view to determining the rights of the latter company's claim to a monopoly of all diamonds found in Rhodesia. The lawsuit in question, to a certain extent, was decided in favour of De Beers, in that it was found that that company did have certain pre-emptive rights; but, seeing that the Courts, in giving judgment, did not attempt to define the nature or scope of such rights, the position of De Beers in connection with Rhodesian diamonds would appear to remain almost as obscure as it was before the action in question was decided. Pending the conclusion of the lawsuit between the British South Africa Company and De Beers, obviously, neither of those companies were in a position to settle final terms as regarded the diamond areas owned by this syndicate, as first discoverers of diamonds in Rhodesia; but in the meantime, in order that their work should not be interrupted, the terms of their original grant, with some slight modifications, were renewed for a further period of years, leaving the final terms as regarded the areas aggregating 20 square miles in extent, already definitely selected by them under the original grant, to be determined at some later date. Although a considerable time had now elapsed since judgment was given in the action referred to, no final arrangement between the two companies for the working of Rhodesian diamonds had, so far, been concluded; but he had been given to understand that a round-table conference with a view to settling the question was likely to take place in the early part of next year, when the chairman and other directors of the Kimberley Board of De Beers were expected to arrive in London. Africa's diamond wars took four million lives. 'Blood on the Stone' tells the story of how diamonds came to be so dangerous, describing the great diamond cartel and a dangerous pipeline leading from war-torn Africa to the glittering showrooms of Paris, London and New York. It describes the campaign that forced an industry and more than 50 governments to create a global control mechanism, and it provides a sobering prognosis on its future.
