Filming is fun! Whether you have a real video camera or a mobile device with video, technology is not so important. The focus is on the idea. But how does your idea become a script? And how can you make your recordings exciting? What should you watch out for when taking the camera? What is important when editing your film material? The book begins with a short review of the film history of the last 40 years. What has changed in the current video features compared to the past? What can you do to get better pictures with your mobile device? Afterwards it's all about planning your own project. You got an idea. So what happens next? How do you turn your idea into a storyboard or script? In the next section we will talk about the filming and what you should pay attention to. In the end, there are tips and tricks for editing the film and what to consider when publishing on the Internet. The book is not a technical reference work. Rather it is an idea guide, which should give the filmmaker food for thought. What is possible in filming and how can you design your scenes creatively? You will find film tips, examples and exercises for your own detective stories, comedy films, holiday reports, learning videos and school projects. From the first idea to the finished film. You also get lots of ideas about my 'special area', the thriller shoot. Through my personal pool of ideas you will surely get new ideas for your next film project - even if this
